SENATOR CHAMBERS: Mr. Speaker and members of the Legislature, I don't know a single one of these gentlemen. I'm sure they're all fine, upstanding citizens. I believe they pay their taxes. I think they go to bed at a reasonable hour. They probably brush their teeth in the morning, at night, and eat their spinach, but nevertheless, all we've been getting are Dalton Brothers. I'd like to see maybe the Andrews Sisters every now and then. All of these appointments, the major appointments, somebody finally did an article, and I talked to some of the reporters about it. I don't see all this diversity that the present Governor was talking about. I'm going to share with you all an article, but I'm going to write a rhyme about it at the time, where he had gone to a gathering of people who are nonwhite, they're also not black. You'll have to wait to get the article to see which ethnic group they are of. But he was talking about the need for diversity. And maybe his understanding of diversity is different from mine. The first gentleman is named Ron, that starts with R; the second one's name is Richard, that starts with an R; the third one's name is Richard, that starts with an R. But the fourth one's name is Jeffrey, that starts with a J. So there we have the diversity. We have names that start with...we have three names that start with an R, and one that starts with a J. But what Mr. Johannis needs to realize is that those of us who are genuinely concerned about government setting the tone go much deeper than the first letter in people's first name. And I intend to talk about it from time to time. But I'm going to vote against this confirmation, and I wanted it clear that my vote does not go to the qualification or capability of either of the three R's and the J. In fact, they might be the most qualified people in the universe for these positions, but too often there are politicians who will give speeches, as the Governor did to this group that I had mentioned earlier, making all of the appropriate comments, but when we get to the real world, where the rubber meets the road, Senator Cudaback, or the hammer hits the head of the nail, Senator Connealy, or the hammer hits the top of the anvil, if you will, a different set of principles will come into play. And when we begin to look around we see a sameness, a monotony. There was a very demeaning comment that white people used to say more blatantly than they do now, but they still hold to that idea, that all black people look alike.
